My coffee wagon plan

Danny Reay, Gateshead. Draft 1, typed on my phone.

What I want to do

I want to run a coffee wagon. A second-hand van fitted out with an espresso machine that I park up and serve coffee, hot chocolate and bought-in cakes from. I want it to be my full-time job.

Who will buy

People out at weekend markets and events, and workers on their lunch break near the retail park by my house on weekdays. I reckon there is loads of foot traffic and nobody doing decent coffee there.

What I will sell

Latte or flat white	£3.20
Americano	£2.60
Hot chocolate	£3.00
Cake	£2.50

What I need to buy

Second-hand van, already fitted out	£6,500
Second-hand espresso machine	£1,800
Grinder	£350
Fridge and cool box	£250
Cups, lids, milk and coffee to start	£400
Sign and branding	£300
Total	£9,600

Money

I have £3,000 saved from my redundancy. The rest I will sort out, maybe a loan.

How much I will make

I think I can sell 90 coffees a day, 6 days a week, at about £3.20 each. That is £288 a day. Each coffee costs me about 80p to make, so I keep about £216 a day. That is about £1,300 a week, so over £5,000 a month. That is more than I earned in the warehouse.

About me

2 years as a barista in a cafe when I was at college. 6 years as a shift supervisor at a distribution warehouse until I was made redundant in the summer. Good with people, always on time, used to early starts.

Next steps

Find a van. Get the coffee machine. Start trading as soon as I can, hopefully in the spring.

Fictional demo document for the Claude Builder hackathon. Not a real person or business.